The full houses at the Dreamland theatre last night spoke well for the sort of a program they are showing. The thrilling drama, "The Judge's Ward," was perhaps the best liked picture of the three, although the Biograph was a close second in favoritism.

The Bijou moving picture theatre in the Seapoint block, owned by B. Dente, was sold today to Alis and Blar Mariani and Gasparelli Brothers. Alis Mariani will be the manager and conduct the theatre for the new owners. The Bijou was formerly owned by S. Massucco, who sold out to Dente three weeks ago.

"Red Wing's Gratitude," an Indian picture of unusual interest because the leading roles are assumed by real Indians. Lively action enough to suit the whole excitable lot of melodrama. "A New Life," the most pleasing in every respect of the series of the Jack Valiant stories; clearly explained, scenic background of the most satisfactory kind. At the Comique to-night.

The program for the Pavilion to-day consists of two star acts of vaudeville and a powerful picture drama, entitled, "The Twelfth Juror." Two comedy pictures also have a place on the program. The vaudeville part of the program is exceptionally strong, as both acts are of the star order, and of an entirely different character. In Skinner & Woods one finds all that is desirable in an act of its kind. In Kit Carson's fancy rifle shooting one sees the highest point of excellence attainable with a rifle, a point about the act that makes it appear more marvelous is the fact that the shooting is done while the performer is balancing himself on a slack wire.

"Why should we be so anxious to communicate with Mars?" asked Mrs. Cummins.

"It would surely be desirable to know something of the inhabitants," replied the modest scientist.

"Do you think so? From what I read I gathered the idea that most of them are working on canals. Knowing as I do how some canal boatmen trick, I am very much inclined to let well enough alone."--Washington Star.

It is difficult enough at best to get those 276 odd men from all sections of the state, who for the most part have never met before, well acquainted with each other and their official business well under way under a spirit of mutual confidence and reciprocal good will. But when week after week of this the most trying part of the session sees all these state conventions held at Montpelier, with all the social and other demands thus imposed upon the lawmakers by their delegates, the trouble is increased many fold.--St. Albans Messenger.
